Enjoyable English classes

LEARNING a language is not the same as studying subjects that involve memorisation of facts such as science, history or geography.

Language needs to be absorbed and practised. The main objective for language teachers is to ensure that their learners become more proficient in using the target language, particular in reading, writing, speaking and listening.

Children are best motivated to learn and use a new language when placed in a non-stressful learning environment.

When a child believes that learning a language can be fun, he or she will be eager to participate.

Games and other activities are useful media to teach language in a non-stressful way. This facilitates the target language to be acquired as part of the activity and be used naturally in familiar situations that children can relate to.

At Cambridge English For Life (CEFL), this communicative method of teaching is used to help students acquire English and prepare them for the Cambridge English tests and examinations.

Enrolment is open to children aged as young as four years old, where they begin their journey to attain a high level of language proficiency. It is important that children begin learning English efficiently and effectively at an early age.

CEFL classes have four components – reading, writing, listening and speaking. Children are encouraged to speak English and actively use it in classroom activities to gain more practice and confidence.

Children are more keen to participate in lessons if they find the learning experience fun.

Other tasks such as drawing, colouring and speaking to the examiner motivate and inspire children in their learning as well.

In addition to developing English language proficiency and preparing students for the Cambridge exams, CEFL also provides enrichment programmes.

The up-to-date course materials include topics of global interest – historical, environmental and cultural – to broaden the minds of students and widen their perspectives. Students are also encouraged to be independent learners in the process.

To be the best that they can be, children need to have an environment conducive to learning that is non-threatening and fun.
